Elements of the assignment to be turned in as follows:

1. The Child Development Case Study Rubric: This was distributed on the first day of class and can also be found on yahoogroups.

2. The Running Narrative: This was completed early in the term and I conducted a preliminary check to make sure that you were on track.

3. The Child Skills Checklist: This was to have been completed over the course of the term. I also did a preliminary check of this and gave you input on whether you were on the right track. You should have very few items with “N’s”.

   Be sure to include my notes from the preliminary check that I conducted earlier in the term.

4. The Analysis and Reflection: This two-page, double spaced analysis of the data should focus on the descriptions in the running narrative and the anecdotal notes on the Child Skills Checklist. The first section should outline the child’s most important areas of strength as well as the areas that the child is ready to work on next. You are to be selective and choose those skills that are the most relevant to what the child is learning now or what they are ready to work on next. Be sure to tie the skills to the development described in the text. You will not be including all of the items. Be selective.

   The second section of this two page paper should be a reflection on why you chose those skills as the most important for the child at this point in time. The reflection should include an observation of what the classroom teachers are doing to support the child’s development of the skills that you have identified.

   Be sure to write this using family friendly language. This means that a parent should be able to understand the terms that are used. Remember, you are not identifying areas of weakness. Rather, you are identifying what the child is ready to work on next.
